Viterra has appointed James Murray to its South Australian team as Business Centre Manager for the Northern Areas in South Australia.

Based at Balaklava, James is responsible for grain receival site operations in the Mid North, Adelaide Plains and Barossa.

Andrew Hannon, Viterra's Country Operations Manager said James brought a wealth of experience and knowledge to Viterra.

"James has more than 10 years experience working in the grains industry," he said.

"He has managed port terminal operations in Queensland and country operations in Victoria, as well as a large farming enterprise of cereal crops and sheep in Southern New South Wales."

James said he was looking forward to working at Viterra.

"My immediate priorities are preparing for harvest, managing safety on sites and assisting with the implementation of key aspects of the Post Harvest Review," he said.

"I have previous experience in grower relations and business development and I'm looking forward to working together with growers this harvest, including attending as many silo committee meetings as I can in the next few weeks."

Viterra's strength is built on local investments and having employees work with growers to efficiently manage the storage and handling network.
